Reads Like Fiction.

The story of how he won his numerous decorations reads like a novel. for it shows that the gods are always with the recklessly brave, who forget everything else but the business of killing Germans. He told The Times of how other fellows "kicked the dirt," but that he remained unscathed He recited the story of advance after advance upon the enemy, two Yankees against fifty Germans; how our boys' indomitable courage and spirit made them triumphant over tag foe-all these things Armstrong toid in the same manner he would have d. scribed a baseball game.

"Two Frenchmen and myself crawl ed out to No Man's Land at midnight, Armstrong related in his quiet, off hand way, in describing one of his many hair-raising experiences. "The moon overhead bothered me a whole lot, for the enemy could not help but see us. Then one of the Frenchmen was hit by a machine gun bullet, and I found out where the Germans had erected a machine gun, in the shelter in a shell hole over night.

Gets Five Germans, "I rigged up a little plan. I put up my tin hat in one corner of the shell hole in which I had crawled and took my place on the other end to watch for a chance to shoot. After a while Boche began shooting at my helmet. bored him through the head and waited for the next. Well, I got five of them that way. The Frenchmen rawled out with me and we searched the Germans. We got a good deal of information from them.' Of his experiences at Soissons Armstrong said:
